RD Notes

Snack Buffer Strategy

Rather than scheduled snacks, this plan gives you a calorie/macro "buffer" each day (~230–330 cal). Use it when you're genuinely hungry—Greek yogurt, a protein shake, string cheese + nuts, or hard-boiled eggs are all great options. This flexible approach helps you eat intuitively while staying within your targets.

Protein Oats — Keep an Eye on Total Carbs

Protein oatmeal is a solid breakfast, but it's the highest-carb meal in this plan (~32g). On oat days, keep lunch and dinner carbs on the lower end. The Tuna Power Bento (10g C) or Shrimp Crudité Box (10g C) pair well.

Sheet Pan Dinners — Built-In Portions

Each sheet pan recipe in your handout is already portioned at 340–380 cal and 30–38g protein per serving. No need to measure or weigh—just plate one serving. If you want more volume, add a side of steamed non-starchy veg (broccoli, cauliflower, green beans).

Mix & Match Freely

This is a template, not a rigid schedule. Any breakfast can go on any day. Any lunchable box or salad works for lunch. Any sheet pan recipe works for dinner. The macros are close enough across options that your daily totals will stay in range.

This meal plan is a starting template. Adjust portions and food choices as needed based on your preferences and tolerance. Discuss changes with your RD at your next visit.
