

GETTING BACK ON TRACK

All-or-nothing thinking is often the reason we feel as though we've "fallen off the wagon". We are either perfect or have completely failed. This thought process of perfection vs. failure is the true sabotage of success. One meal off-plan will not derail overall progress, but several choices will! The longer we stay stuck in this mindset, the greater that one off-plan meal will continue to negatively affect us. You cannot undo what you did in the past, all you can do is learn from it and learn ways to handle it differently in the future.

Common triggers of going off track:

Boredom with choices

Had to take care of others (who/why/when)

No time

Not seeing results

Missing crunchy or sweet foods too much

Holiday or birthday celebration

Vacation

Change of schedule/job/school

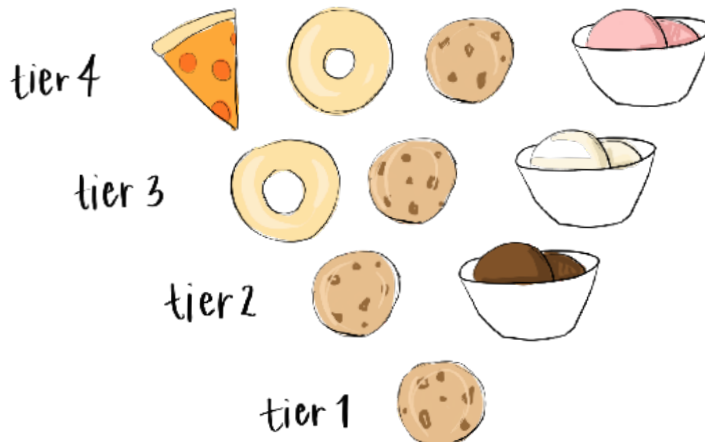

Reached a goal

Stress

Emotional hardships

Multiple social obligations in a row

Let us stress that we do NOT expect perfection! The key to success is planning indulgences, enjoying them, keeping these choices from spiraling out of control, and getting back on track the next day/meal/bite. Do not allow one deviation to be a justification to continue the behavior. Likewise, don't try to "make up for it" the next day by not eating.

Learning to break the all-or-nothing thinking and resume good choices immediately instead of allowing poor choices to pile up is the difference between long term health and weight loss and just “crash dieting.” To get back on track start simple and get organized!! We can help you with that so let’s create a strategy that is simple and will work for you.

Trigger: _____

Strategy:
